Also, that the bridge is not in an unsafe condition. Some boys tore off some boards on the side, but they were promptly replaced as soon as the company learned the fact.

A Terrible Offence.

The poor little fool, whose mental capacity is much smaller than even his diminutive physical proportions, says in reference to Mr. M. V. B. Searing that "the Ex's mean insinuations and underhanded remarks about this town hurt and bred mad, will have no weight with the people of Dover," etc. Really, this is the first knowledge we have had of saying anything mean about Mr. Searing. We have always believed he was a gentleman and an upright citizen, and we do not believe any person can show a sentence in the Era that will imply anything else. We have had occasion to disagree with Mr. Searing on political and public questions and have exercised our right to criticise him openly, without courting either his favor or dislike. The only thing we alleged against him in the last campaign was his desire to have an endorsement on a Democratic ticket, after taking a nomination on the ticket of another party. We knew precisely what we were talking about when we made this assertion and were prepared to furnish abundant proof. Mr. Searing had a right to do this if he wished, and we had a right to criticise it. This, we believe, is the sum total of our offence, and if it be "mean" or "underhanded" the parties interested will have to make the most of it.

The Mine Hill Road.

MINERS DRIVER: Drive a care I care, as the saints see, about the blessing the auld man who rid from Drakesville to Dover for fifty year gav me in yer paper last week.
